Are you a civil society organization working in health?

Have you heard of the International Health Partnership (IHP+)?

IHP+ is a global initiative to improve development cooperation and coordination in health. It potentially really matters to your country and the way your country's health system is financed and functions. It ultimately affects the health of citizens.

IHP+ is critical for efforts to achieve the new Sustainable Development Goals including universal health coverage (UHC). As CSOs, IHP+ needs you to be involved.

Aligning for better results – what CSOs can do:

Find out:

1. If your government is a signatory to IHP+;
2. Which of your country's donor agencies are a signatory to IHP+; and
3. Whether these donors are working with each other and the government to support the national health plan.

You can also:

4. Mobilise a CSO platform for advocacy;
5. Advocate for effective development cooperation and coordination principles to be put into practice at both government and donor agency level; and
6. Support the government to choose the right priorities and develop a comprehensive and strong national health plan.
